Cooper Parry opens new office in London

Regional Business Advisers Cooper Parry is to open a fourth office on 1 July 2009, but this time in the heart of the City of London. A new London based partner, Grant Jones, a chartered accountant, insolvency practitioner and lawyer will head up the new office, located in Tower 42.

Cooper Parry retains its strong commitment to the Midlands but seeks to extend its national presence as advisers to private businesses.

Colin Shaw, Chairman at Cooper Parry, said, "We want to build stronger links with businesses and key influencers in Europe's biggest financial centre. We see huge benefits for our existing clients in this exciting step in the ongoing development of our business."

The new office is a positive move in the current economic climate, supporting their plans for growth and a sign that confidence is returning for some firms.

Colin continued, "A London presence will help us to continue to develop our access to international markets which will be a real benefit for our clients. We already play a lead role in IGAF Worldwide, a top 20 association of accounting firms, so this is a very exciting time in our development."
